Urban Legends Revealed

These fascinating stories are too good
- and too frightening - to be true!

22 x 60

22 x 60 Produced in 2002-2004

MOSTLY TRUE STORIES features dramatic recreations of urban legends and folk myths while investigating the veracity of the stories portrayed. Exploring the fine line between truth and fiction, viewers experience the making of these myths as we travel back in time to the source and circumstances that make these stories so compelling.

Each generation seems to spawn its own classics: "The Slasher Under The Car", "The Spider In The Hair", "The Dormitory Surprise", "The Kidney Heist", and so many more. The best of these dubious tales manage to reinvent themselves from decade to decade. Folklorists have tagged these stories as "urban legend", but in fact these myths are rooted in the diverse culture and life experiences of people everywhere. The protagonists (and victims) in these stories run the gamut of farmers, college students, immigrants, butchers, bachelorettes, traveling salesmen, bikers, preachers, and even the rich and famous.

MOSTLY TRUE STORIES blends dramatic recreations with interviews, selected film and TV clips, graphics, and archival pictures and objects. Each episode presents three to four feature stories. Topics include sex and scandal; crime and punishment; fun and games; the workplace; college life; foreign travel and foreign visitors; pets, insects, and animals; and most prevalent of all, horror.

ABOUT THE HOST:

Natasha Henstridge left her hometown of Springdale, Newfoundland, at age 14 to pursue a modeling career. By the time she was 15 Natasha had appeared in ads and commercials for Oil of Olay, Lady Stetson and Old Spice, and also graced the cover of French Cosmopolitan and various other fashion magazines. Her first acting role was in the science fiction feature film, Species. Other films to her credit include Maximum Risk, co-starring Jean-Claude Van Damme; Species II; The Whole Nine Yards, co-starring Bruce Willis and Matthew Perry; and Bounce, co-starring Gwyneth Paltrow and Ben Affleck.
